

RootBeer Summary Report

September 5th 2025,

The rootbeer project is still actively in development, after a long pause in commits we are slowly starting to release a few more features. Upon a recent full pull of the repo we can see what files were updated around what time and by what author. Some files that were left out of the pull were configuration files, we decided that any file that was updated 3 times or less was more than likely an auto generated file that we had nothing to do with.

In our second graph we can see what weeks we have committed the most.

From weeks zero to fifty, we had a solid run, then radio silence until week two twenty five, where we slowly rolled out multiple small updates quickly, then week three hundred one hit and we released more commits then previously recorded, unfortunately since then we were back in a slump until we released a small update at week 480.

Currently we are preparing for another big spike that should be coming soon. As for who is putting in the work we can see that Scott is our MVP, pushing a ton of submissions, meanwhile Andy and Matthew are doing their parts. We may want to put daniel, matt, and stefan on watch as we believe there is room for improvement on their ends. This ends this update on the rootbeer repository, once new features are released or we make big changes to the existing app we will send out a new update with current information of the state of development.

<https://github.com/glassbraker/solopart>

